Irish News.

At the last quarter sessions between Killarney and Tralee, County Kerry, there were seventy-three gentlemen present on notice to quit where the tenants "were perfectly solvent." So much for a Land Act passed by a British Parliament, with the hypocritical pretense of benefiting Ireland.

Mr. Graves, a Wexford man, a well known merchant of Liverpool, and the senior member of Parliament for that borough, died suddenly on the 18th ult. Early in life he amassed wealth in New York, which he employed in Liverpool, where he became a millionaire.

Ship-building is being carried on with more than usual vigor in Belfast; and the result is a fleet of Irish steamers rivaling those built on the Clyde.

The Land Act, from which so much was expected, has turned out mean treachery, as John Mitchell said in the beginning it was the tenants' farmers are organizing against it in every direction.

The policemen who were severely beaten at Clough, County Kilkenny, are still so ill that they don't feel well.

Another patriot gone—one who fought in '98, and whose bravery at Arklow, Hacketstown, and Vinegar Hill rendered the name of James Kearns as one of the bravest and most lion-hearted of Ireland's patriotic sons. He was also one of those who at Ballyellis proved to the Britons that undisciplined Irishmen fighting for liberty, were superior to mercenaries.

He died at his residence, in Coolgreaney, at the ripe old age of one hundred years, after an illness of ten years, regretting that he had not another chance to wield his pike for Irish freedom.

Mrs. McArdle lately died in Fingall at the age of one hundred and fifteen years. Her son, a frisky youth of 77, did the reaping and she the binding on the farm last harvest. That's nearly as good as Jimmy Kennan's dance of thirty hours.

Verdicts have been obtained in two cases (O'Byrne's and Fraser's) against Lord Hartington and others for the Phoenix Park outrage, but the Crown having a long purse, frustrates the prosecution against its underlings by interminable appeals.

Major Knox, the founder of the Irish Times, died at his residence, Fitzwilliam Square, Dublin, on the 24th of January.

On Saturday, the 25th ult., a brig laden with coals for Dundalk hove in sight of Ologherhead, and signaled for a pilot at Fort Oriel. It was blowing a terrible gale at the time from the South, when four pilots—father, his son, MacGhie, Gorman and Duffy—put off in a yawl. Gorman boarded the brig, the sea being furious. While in the act of telling off the boat from the vessel she lurched, and a heavy sea struck her, when she came in collision with the vessel, which stove in the stern and the boat capsized, precipitating the four men into the sea. Their perilous position was observed by the following fisherman: John Matthews, Levinge, Tallon, Hodgkins, Girvin, Gorman, and Coast-guardman Lane, from Point Oriel, who immediately launched one of their trail yawls, and proceeded to rescue the drowning men, at the imminent risk of their own lives. After a hard struggle, they reached the four men, and after great exertion on the part of the crew succeeded in picking them up. They returned to Point Oriel and landed them safely, but suffering from exhaustion and cold.

The German barque Amaranth, 824, Captain Hagen, which reached Queenstown on the 22nd ult., with a cargo of cotton from Savannah, got orders through the agent, Mr. Harvey, to proceed to Bremen to discharge. On hearing of their destination, however, six of the crew refused to proceed any farther, as they wanted to get ashore at Queenstown. The vessel returned to Queenstown, where the six men were put in irons, which they preferred to a return to their native land after enjoying the freedom of America.

The small-pox is very prevalent in Lurgan, Armagh.

The funeral of William J. Bryan, Esq., J. P. of Ennisceorthy, the popular and widely loved landlord, took place on the 24th ult., and was attended by the elite of the county of Wexford. It was one of the largest funerals that have taken place for a long time. The numerous tenantry of the deceased were dressed in scarfs and hat bands, and walked four deep.

Home Rule is the order of the day in Tyrone county. At a meeting of Magistrates in Limerick, a resolution was passed protesting against an increase of the police force.

England.

The London Times is somewhat afraid that the immense expense incurred by the Admiralty in providing England with a fleet of ironclads is so much money flung away. It says: "The news which we receive from Madeira of the collision between the Northumberland and the Hercules give rise to some unpleasant reflections. It is not pleasant, when the skill of our shipbuilders has supplied us with bigger and heavier ironclads than the rest of the world possesses, to find that these costly structures are dangerous 'in company' to one another. The Northumberland, as we are told, was lying at single anchor, when her cable parted close to the bows, and the officer of the watch and the engineer staff did all that could be done to arrest her course, she drifted in less than twenty minutes against the Hercules, and carried away the jibboom and foretop gallant mast of that vessel, with very little apparent damage to herself. We had very lately the Agincourt run on the Pearl Rock, and the Lord Clyde aground in the Mediterranean; and now the Bellerophon is 'shaky about the bottom' from the collision with the Minotaur; the Sultan, from having touched the ground, it is supposed, at Ferrol; and the Northumberland, sister ship of the Agincourt, from 'twinging on the Hercules prow.' Every one of these ships, except, perhaps, the Lord Clyde, cost from £350,000 to £500,000, and yet, from one cause or another, they are so handled that within a year or so they are all seriously endangered. It seems but the other day that we heard of the Channel squadron at Gibraltar, with picked crews and the newest armaments, the admiration and the envy of foreign officers. And now, out of six vessels representing two and a half millions sterling, two are ordered home to repair the consequences of their own collision, and the two most powerful that remain are 'shaky about the bottom' from running aground or from collision with a consort ship." As satisfaction, Rear-Admiral Hornby is to be tried by court-martial.

Mr. Bradlaugh thus reasons on the possibility of the Prince of Wales losing the English crown: "It is asked ought the fact that George IV was a very bad man to be urged as a ground for hindering the succession of Albert Edward? Certainly not; but the fact that the four Georges were all very bad Kings, and that William IV was not a good one, ought not to be a ground for elevating Albert Edward to the throne. Let him be elected or rejected on his own merits and qualifications for the Kingly throne. And if left to popular election, what are his chances?"

G. B. Skipworth, one of the members of Parliament for Lincolnshire, has been fined £500, and imprisoned three months for speaking his mind about the Lord Chief Justice.

A loyal organ, the Leicester Chronicle, without referring to the liking evinced by the Prince of Wales for pretty women, admits in a sorrowful tone that the Heir Apparent has come down (or gone up) to the front rank of blacklegs. Says the Chronicle: "Monarchy will be severely on its trial, some day, in this country. The successor to the throne show, by his regard for the excellence of his public and private life, his fitness for rule, his career may be free from much trouble; he will be accepted as the hereditary president of our commonwealth with gladness by the nation. To slaughter hares by hectoring, to associate himself directly with the turf, and to begin with the formation of a racing stud, is to enter on what many a young nobleman has found to be the 'road to ruin.' The Marquis of Hastings and many others have supplied melancholy examples of this fatal folly. The Prince of Wales may, and we trust will, escape their end; but he will alienate from himself, as the representative of Queen Victoria, some of the 'fastest and finest spirits of the age,' unless he avoids the pursuits of the least reputable members of society, and prefers to the company of blacklegs the society of wise statesmen, men of intellect, and those who are distinguished by their private virtues and public services."

Here is the way the Isle of Man Times vents its loyal ire, and wonders that the world is not in arms to put down the people who think the Queen is human. "We are deeply grieved to have state that recently shameful words of insult were launched from a public platform in Douglas against the Queen. The occasion to which we refer was the annual temperance tea festival, and the foul insult to her Majesty proceeded from the ranting tongue of the Rev. S. Smith. He is, however, not only a 'feetotaller,' but also a Good Templar, and speaking of a Good Templar's Lodge in Peel, he described it as follows: 'It is the finest lodge in the world for the number, the size, and the good looks of its members. The lodge would make a fine body of Life Guards for her Majesty, for it would make her sober and all about her. Here, then, was a direct charge made against her Majesty that she needed the exercise of positive compulsion to keep her within the bounds of ordinary sobriety, and yet there was not a single person to be found in all that craven assemblage to fling back the charge into the throat of the audacious libeller.' All this is simply another evidence that the popularity with which her Majesty ascended the throne has in great part vanished."

Here is a much more serious matter—"the slaughter of the innocents"—on the authority of the London Times: "One of the most fertile causes of excessive infant mortality is the excessive practice in manufacturing districts of narcotizing young children that they may be more conveniently laid aside when more lucrative occupations present themselves than that of nursing the baby. Hundreds of gallons of opium, in various forms, are sold weekly in many districts for this purpose. Now it is likely that the practice will be checked until justice can be induced to take rather a severe view of the suddenly fatal misadventures which this sort of chronic poisoning not unfrequently produces. It appears, however, to be very difficult to persuade them to look upon it as other than a venial offense. The cases in which the poison is deliberately administered, and no mistake shall about it, are so numerous that the world is sick of hearing that such atrocity is a permanent and recognized Anglo-Saxon institution."

The wholesale despatches from the British army so winnily despatched on a late occasion by the Duke of Richmond still continues, it is presumed, with the aid of Irish nationalists.

Whatever else England may neglect, she attends to the dry goods business. She exported last year the enormous quantity of 412,661,961 yards of woolen and worsted manufactures, at the invoice value of $154,692,880. Besides that, her exports of manufactured iron and steel amounted to 3,888,632 tons, of the value of £36,060,547.

The strike of more than 20,000 colliers in South Wales still continues, and from threats and other indications of ill-feeling, serious consequences are anticipated.

Mr. Morrison, of Ohio, truly says it is bullets not ballots which will overthrow the British Government in Ireland, and it is only when the Government is convinced that he shall use the former on the failure of the latter that it will liberate the prisoners and think of doing justice.

Certain magnates in Congress are having their little affairs debated, the question being mainly retention or expulsion. It would be too bad to expel them, as some have proved superior ability in money matters, and it would therefore be a great relief to the country to stop talking about the Credit Mobilier. We have therefore to propose that those gentlemen shall be appointed a Committee of Finance, with a view towards the Isles of Sky (Sidera Caelum).

Towards the great centennial anniversary of American Independence, Pennsylvania gives a voluntary and grand contribution of $2,137,000, which evinces to what depth the old roots struck in the State of Pennsylvania a hundred years ago.

Diamonds being hard crystals, (though we have no evidence of the fact), and Mr. Goodman, of the Virginia Enterprise, being a headman who doesn't believe good of all men, Mr. Lent who was so cruelly swindled by the bogus diamonds of Arizona has sued him for libel. Mr. Goodman says he is a better man, and will carry the war right into Africa, the place from which the diamonds, at fifty cents a piece, originated.

Some New York lunatics with eminent names are agitating on the matter of having Almighty God recognized in the Constitution of the United States; but they probably know neither the Constitution, nor Him by whom it has been, and will be, preserved.

So far as can be learned from the Cuban refugees or the Cuban insurgents, their idea is still complete independence of Spain, whether it may be monarchical or republican. The freedom proclaimed to the slaves, and the willingness of the mother country to make large concessions and full amnesty, may produce changes that can not yet be fully calculated on. At any rate, the Cubans have battled bravely, and brave men are always respected.

The Boston Trades Journal says: "This year will be as memorable as last year for strikes and lockouts. In Great Britain there are tens of thousands of workmen on strike now. New York labor organizers are now preparing for another war with capital in the Empire City. We can foresee much suffering on the one hand, much loss on the other, and irritation everywhere. The Eight-hour League and other organizations in Boston will of course hold their annual meetings to agitate their several specialties. The excitement last year which was leading to a general strike in Boston was allayed only just in time. This year the event may happen in real earnest."

Europe.

An influential London journalist gives the following summary as descriptive of the state of European affairs:—"The social and political condition of the greater part of Europe is far from reassuring. The nations are not at peace, if they be temporarily at peace. Poverty, misery and discontent are growing apace. Modern society is in a state of disintegration. It is composed of classes who wage war against each other. The monarchical idea has brought forth abundant fruit. It has created and developed special interests and privileges; erected barriers between citizen and citizen; caused the few pampered ones to live in idleness and luxury; and made the many toil the harder, and for very inadequate recompense. It is but natural for cultivated men to resist oppression and wrong. The crowned rulers of States and their dignified satellites flourished full well so long as they could draw the pall of ignorance over the minds of their subjects. But, a new era having set in for the human race, mankind are no longer the slaves of ignorance. The population of Europe who have not yet entered upon self-government are, however, enfranchised in soul. They are organizing, conferring, working for what they consider to be their inalienable rights. In this way, between the masses a cordial sympathy is created. Time is only wanted more fully to develop ideas which are comparatively of modern birth—to bring into universal operation high principles of government and social science, which can not be regarded as new-fangled; for they have been already tested to the uttermost. Monarchs 'by the grace of God' are naturally alarmed at the signs of the times."

To which we append Byron's lines—
God save the King and King,
For if He don't, I doubt if men will longer;
Methinks I hear a little bird that sings,
By and by, the people will be stronger.

The Cortes of Spain, short as has been their republican rule, have done a noble work, at which in other times the whole world would have rang with rejoicing. Little is said about it now, simply because it is a republican deed. Grand as a Republic may be, it is never noble till it rises to grandeur. Old Spain, awakened and rejuvenated, has opened wide her doors for all her political prisoners, and told them to come forth erect and free; and next she has abolished slavery in all her colonies, so that wherever the new Spanish tri-color floats, no slave for evermore shall shrink thereunder. Yet British journals prate of Spain's downfall; we gladly preach her glorious uprising. Spain has now no political prisoners; England has fifty, and yet pretends to lecture Europe on humanity.

Telegrams inform us of apprehended riots in Madrid, but we must be wary of believing everything that the telegram may tell us, for his manipulations are, for the most part, ordered by his masters, the British ministers. We shall, therefore, hear for some time of everything against the republic, and nothing for it.

The Republic of Spain is becoming a permanent fact, and as we said previously, the Spaniards are proving themselves fully capable of enjoying the privileges and blessings of a free government.

Ex-King Amadeus has experienced a sell. Having no idea that a Republic would be proclaimed, he fully calculated on the army recalling him. Other sovereigns would do well to follow his example.

The report of the Military Committee appointed to investigate the charges against Marshal Bazaine will shortly appear. The Marshal himself is said to be in very low spirits, as it is well known the report condemns him.

Tricks in Galway.

An account which has just reached us by letter from the county mentioned, so well illustrates Irish feeling and Irish characteristics, that we cheerfully give it space. Ballygar is an ancient town blest with several public houses, a church, a police barrack, and the mansion of the high and mighty magistrate, D. H. Kelly. It is remarkable also for well-attended wakes, fighting fairs, high horse-racing, practical joking, a few thimble riggers, twelve of the most loyal Irish peelers in Christendom, and one John Leonard. This John had a small reason connected with beating the police for leaving a fishing village on Galway Bay, and he was accordingly known only as Claddagh. He was never much given to hard work, but he had a genius for playing Tackam at wakes, and he went to every one of them for ten miles round. Light hearted and light headed, everybody liked him, and he liked everybody with the exception of Britishers, red-coats, and peelers. Between them and him there was war open and declared without much concealment on either side. Among the peelers was one Sandy Robinson, who was too blue a loyalist to be very popular in Galway. He lay in ambush, and arrested Claddagh for singing a Fenian song. These songs with old airs have been turned into Irish, and it was in Irish that our friend was wailing the echoes when the sergeant interrupted the melody. In the morning the culprit was brought before the magistrate, and the charge of singing treason was preferred. What were the words? Sandy couldn't tell, for they were in a language he didn't understand. What had Claddagh to say in the matter? "Well, your honor, sure and it was no Fenian song at all; but one in respect of your grand-aunt, who was a beauty in her day. Surely, and the song was about Mild Mable Kelly of Ballygar." "Now, sergeant, it's a shame to bring the poor man here, and if you ever do the like again, look out. Here Claddagh, here's half a guinea for you, and sing the song right here." Claddagh did so, attended wakes as usual, and indulged in all the Irish treason he pleased thereafter.

One night returning homeward, he found Sergeant Sandy gloriously drunk, and unable to make his way to the barrack. Generously proffering his assistance, Claddagh did help him along; not to the barrack, however, but to the church, outside of which hung the bell-rope in primitive fashion. To this rope he tied the Sergeant, while he should go and open the back door of the Sergeant's quarters. He did not return in a hurry, and Sandy getting uneasy, tried to go ahead. Staggering one side, and the side to it, the bell began to ring, and everybody turned out, as that was the usual fire alarm. No one being observable, the policemen who were looking for it, thought of ascertaining who was ringing the bell so spasmodically. There, with his hands tied behind him, was the inebriated Sandy, who, of course got leave to go home northward without recompense for his lengthened rascality. It is understood that the sly Claddagh, who was the author of all the Sergeant's woes, is on his way here to join some genial friends in San Francisco. We would like to get a glimpse of the ex-tackler.

Last Sunday's Convention.

The delegates appointed by the different Irish Organizations of this city met again last Sunday, the principal business being concerned with the report of the Committees appointed at the meeting previous. Mr. J. H. Doherty, Chairman of Committee to wait on the Rev. Mr. Gibney, reported that gentleman's willingness to comply with the wishes of the Convention.

Mr. J. J. Donovan, of the Hall Committee, reported that Mr. John McCullough had very kindly given the use of the California Theater for the literary exercises. It was also officially stated that Mr. McCullough had offered to deliver the poem written for the occasion by Daniel O'Connell, Esq. A most complimentary vote of thanks was tendered Mr. John McCullough for his continued kindness to the Irish people.

Judge Cooney, from the Finance Committee, reported that the result of a portion of two day's collection to defray expenses was $500, and that there would be no lack of funds. The Committee on literary exercises were granted further time to report.

The officers of the Jackson Dragoons were admitted to seats in the Convention. Capt. Flannigan, Messrs. Ward, J. H. Dougherty, and the Grand Marshal with the officers of the Convention were appointed a Committee on invitation. A member proposed that the Catholic clergy be invited, upon which a spirited debate arose, one gentleman causing considerable amusement by stating that he was a sheep of the flock and deeply sympathized with his dissenting brothers who were left out in the cold. Finally it was unanimously decided that every Irish clergyman, without any distinction of creed, should be invited to participate in the demonstration. The Convention adjourned to meet in two weeks.

California Items.

Sonoma county wants woolen mills, and if it starts them successfully, it deserves credit. Other places should have woolen mills, for the loss by frost and otherwise is enormous. Last year 25,000,000 pounds of wool went overland, and of this nearly 10,000,000 pounds consisted of oil and tar. The cost of transportation at three cents a pound was on the waste matter alone $300,000. The mountain region south of the Salinas Valley is one of the finest wool producing districts in the Union, but one looks in vain for any woolen mills near it. Castroville is splendidly situated as the site of such a structure. It is already a thriving town, is within three miles of Moss Landing, at which steamers touch weekly, and has a depot on the extension of the Southern Pacific Railroad. We believe that the liberal proprietor of the adjoining lands, Juan B. Castro, would cheerfully donate the ground necessary for the works, and we are accordingly surprised that none of the persons interested in woolen manufactures have turned their eyes in that direction. We assert first, that it is want of enterprise which prevents the State from having numerous woolen mills, and next that there are few—if any—locations in the State so suitable for them as the place we have named, and know so thoroughly—Castroville. There is but one exception (and that for want of skill) in California for woolen mills not paying. That at Marysville has from the start paid one and a half per cent. per month on the stock investment; and other mills are equally prosperous. Yet Marysville had no peculiar advantages. Los Angeles has just started one, and Vallejo, Santa Rosa, and Petaluma are about to imitate the example. There is money in the business, if men of experience and enterprise get hold of it.

The works have commenced on the railroad between San Rafael and San Rafael.

There must be something done to prevent those horrible mistakes of druggists' clerks. One of the careless fellows lately gave a young man in Louisville a bottle of medicine instead of cocaine. The youth went to church, and after applying the contents of the bottle freely to his handkerchief, and applying the handkerchief freely to his nose, he was in no condition or devout worship. This was in getting to be alarming.

The Chinese, with a good deal of sarcasm, call ceremony the smoke of friendship.

THE NATIONALIST.

SAN FRANCISCO, MARCH 2, 1873.

City Items

The Grand Marshal of St. Patrick's Day invites the co-operation of all classes of Irishmen, to make the celebration a grand success. He is at all hours to be found at his office in Irish American Hall, Howard street, where he will be glad to receive suggestions and assistance from everyone willing to co-operate. Nothing will be left undone on his part to make the day a credit to the Irish people. A meeting of Aids will be held next Sunday.

WANTED, IMMEDIATELY.—By the NATIONALIST Publishing and Printing Association, two ladies and two gentlemen to act as solicitors for the NATIONALIST. Apply personally or by letter at the office, No. 6, Post street, San Francisco. Most liberal terms.

Daniel O'Connell is to write the poem for St. Patrick's Day, and Mr. John McCullough has consented to deliver it. The latter gentleman has also kindly offered the use of the California Theater for the literary exercises.

The Finance Committee reported last Sunday in the Irish Convention that there would be no lack of funds to pay all the expenses of the celebration of St. Patrick's Day.

The Eastport is the name of a very handsome propeller of 500 tons, built at Owens' dock, at the Potrero, at a cost of $75,000. Measurement, the hundred and sixty-five feet; length, thirty-two feet six inches in the beam; depth of hold, seven feet six inches. Her machinery—of four hundred horse-power—was made at the Risdon Iron Works, in this city. She is intended to trade with the place the name of which she bears.

Mr. Louis Tress, so long and favorably known as Customer, has just received at her establishment, 514 and 516 Jackson street, a fresh supply of Theatrical Costumes, Ball Dresses, Military Uniforms, etc. It will be remembered that this lady gave exquisite satisfaction year by year for the unique and beautifully designed outfits she got up for the Daughter of Erin, the Gallowglass, and others which attracted so much attention at last St. Patrick's Day.

Harbor Commissioner Marks, after postponing an investigation by interposing technical objections, has found it necessary to resign his position, probably because his salary was stopped. It takes the Post or the Chronicle to look after such gentry.

Irish-American Hall continues to be the most attractive place of resort the city can boast of. The variety of amusement offered every Sunday evening is of the most superior description. Last Sunday was no exception. Mr. John Farley's lecture on the "Labor Movement in Pennsylvania" was an able exposition of the subject.

A most singular and romantic confession of the person whose body was found in the bay appeared in the Post of Monday evening last.

Belle Chamberlain claims to be a spiritualist, and described the "personal appearance" of several spirits whom she saw among the audience attending a lecture she delivered last Sunday at Mercantile Hall. She is raising funds to try and save Charles Russell from suffering the extreme penalty of the law for murder.

The Board of Health held a meeting last Monday; considerable business was transacted. Bates reported the escape from the pest house of two Chinamen with small-pox. They are no doubt by this time employed as house servants.

The letters received during the past week from the mines are very encouraging. Supervisor McCarthy, of the Fourth Ward, is a candidate for the office of Sheriff at the Fall elections. In reference to the remarks of Tuesday's Chronicle on the nomination of Mr. McCarthy for Sheriff, that some editors will oppose him because he is a Republican, and some Republicans because he is a Democrat, the Post says: "We thought Frank Fixley the only man in San Francisco open to such cross fire as that." To which we add, that no other than the irrepressible Frank could write the article at all.

"Education flourishes better in Republics than in monarchies" was the subject of debate before a large and respectable audience assembled in the Hall of St. Francis College on Monday evening. Miss Nora Buckley, so well known in connection with previous literary exercises in this Hall, on this occasion, with the assistance of her fair companion, brought down the house with her brilliant performance in which the overture was "William Tell," was rendered. Mr. B. Robinson's original poem—"Emerald of the Deep"—stamped him as one who may be called upon at some future St. Patrick's celebration to be Poet of the Day. The subject of debate was well handled; and set in a strong light the superior debating powers of the young gentlemen. Mr. Sullivan's defence was a remarkable one for so young a man. Committee chosen from the audience, consisting of T. O'Sweeney, Judge Tobin, P. McCarren, and Alfred Kelly decided the question in the affirmative.

THE CASE OF TEMPERANCE.—There will be a free lecture on the above subject this afternoon (Sunday) at three o'clock p. m., in Tammany Hall, corner of Eighth and Golden Gate streets. The lecture is to be delivered by the champion of the St. Joseph's Temperance Society, (Daniel MacSweeney, President), and at that society has already done so much good for the good cause, and it has now been successful in inducing the Rev. Father Justin to treat this important subject on this occasion, the audience will be sure to come away greatly edified and instructed. Those who can procure tickets on Father Cullen or Mr. MacSweeney should make a point of attending, as the lecture will be no common one.

Through the exertions of the Chronicle and Evening Post the public are again to be regaled with disclosures of corruption and dishonesty among the official quarters. It is time it is poor "Jack" State Quarantine was under a close watch. If it was not for the existence of two black sheep there, no knowing how the public would be regaled by those appointed to guard their interests. We record of this city's official corruption for the last twelve months is such as to take from us the right of regarding too closely the wrong doings of officials in the portions of the Union.

"The Market street cars intend raising their fare," we are told, and asked would the horses of those cars be it higher. Call and answer.

SUNDAY AND SUNDAY.—On Thursday afternoon the ship Patrick, Captain F. J. Wilson left the harbor for Queenstown, Ireland, with 31,324 cents of wheat valued at $35,000. She was towed outside the Heads by the Wind, and the pilot left her at 4:30 p. m. four miles N. by N. E. from the North Head. Soon after he left she struck upon what is supposed to be the remains of an old wreck, and in a few moments filled with water. In attempting to return to port she struck upon a four fathom bank of sand known as the "Potato Patch," and began straining and laboring to an extent which promised certain destruction. The pilot, Captain Digge, answered the signals for help and the officers and crew were saved, but the vessel and cargo is a total loss. The cargo is on the account of Marshall & Brothers, of London, and is insured. The tug Neptune was at once sent to her assistance, but the vessel's hull was under water and nothing could be done. The Patrick arrived at this port January 25th in 73 days from Hongkong, with merchandise consigned to Macdonald & Co., and commenced to load wheat February 17th.

In San Francisco the Spaniards have a tri-weekly journal, the Italian a weekly, the Jews a weekly, the French a daily, the Germans two, besides several weeklies, and the Irish—well, we are waiting to find out exactly what they will have.

There are several papers published in this State by loyal subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, but not one of them designed to notice the anniversary celebration of Washington's Birthday. The British Consul quite consistently failed in the usual courtesy of hanging out his pilot's rag.

The different National organizations which meet at Confederation Hall, 751 Market street, are making great exertions to make their Division the most attractive and significant in the parade on St. Patrick's Day. This is as it should be. All Irish Organizations should vie with one another in making the day a grand success. Without exception, we believe this year's celebration will excel all former ones of the kind on this coast, and the attractions will be more varied and numerous. The presentation of flags will take place in the morning at Horticultural Hall, after which come the parade and literary exercises, and in the evening one of the most brilliant balls ever given by the Nationalists of this coast will take place in Horticultural Hall, which will be beautified and decorated so rarely as to cause a visit as a spectacle a most desirable privilege.

On Tuesday evening last St. Francis Church was filled to overflowing. The occasion was an able lecture by the Rev. Father Richard on the Chinese Question. He proved cheap labor a fallacy, and the importation of Chinese a fraud. In fact, the Chinese were a race to bamboozle, confuse, and injure the whites; and the sooner the Pagans who "couldn't be converted were sent home, and denied re-admission under ordinary circumstances into the United States, so much the better would it be for themselves, for California, and for the rest of North America.

Lewis Cunningham has been appointed by the Governor of the State to fill the vacant (most willingly, of course), by Harbor Commissioner Marks.

Blessings to California are aplaudible. It never rains but it pours! Out at the last of seven hundred passengers by the last steamer from China and Japan, two hundred and thirty-four were female Chinese, having a character, having lost their own long since.

NOTWITHSTANDING the rush at GARLAND'S COUGH DROP and Candy Depot—223 Market Street—for all Holiday Gifts and Family Candies, he still continues to furnish his renowned COUGH DROP for all suffering from Colds, Coughs, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Whooping Cough, Croup, Influenza, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Lungs, Asthma and Consumption.

THE NATIONALIST.

SAN FRANCISCO, MARCH 2, 1873

The Colonial Question.

On the subject of the Colonial Question, Goldwin Smith writes from Toronto to the London Daily News as follows:—I have twice read extracts from an English Conservative journal, stating that I have recanted the opinions respecting the Colonial question which I formerly maintained in a series of letters to you, and that I have become an avowed adherent of the Imperial system. I am at a loss to account for the existence of this misapprehension. The system has been greatly changed since the date of my first letter to you on the subject. The principle of Colonial self-government has been more extensively applied, the Colonies have been thrown more on their own resources, the army has been concentrated in England, our useless, expensive and dangerous occupation of the Ionian Islands has been brought to an end, and the earnings of British labor have ceased to be squandered in Maori and Caffre wars. Still, I remain convinced that the system itself is inherently evil if indefinitely prolonged, and that the aim of the British statesmen of the last generation it was, the gradual development of the colonies into nations. This conviction has been strengthened by my residence in a colony. Continued dependence upon Downing street appears to me to be clearly checking the growth of Canadian nationality, and preparing the way for annexation.
